EMILY MURPHY

(b) (6)

Emily Murphy is an expert in federal procurement policy and execution, and is passionate about using contracting reform to increase value for taxpayers, agencies, and businesses. She currently serves as the White House Liaison for the General Services Administration (GSA), which is responsible for nearly $60 billion a year in real property, design and construction, commercial item, professional services, and information technology contracts on behalf of the Federal Government. President Bush appointed her to serve as the inaugural Chief Acquisition Officer at GSA, where she led the transformation of the agency's assisted acquisition centers and the consolidation of the Federal Supply Service and the Federal Technology Service. An authority on procurement regulation, Emily has served as GSA's representative to the Federal Acquisition Regulatory (FAR) Council and as the leader of the Civilian Agency Acquisition Council. In this capacity, she modernized the FAR and GSA regulations to reflect the government's increasing use of service contracts as opposed to supplies.

Emily is a recognized leader in small business procurement who has sought to use the Small Business Act programs to increase competition and the health of the domestic industrial manufacturing and technological base, both at the Small Business Administration (SBA) and on the Hill. In addition to an appointment at SBA during the Bush Administration, she served three different Chairmen of the House Small Business Committee. Under Chairmen Jim Talent of Missouri, Sam Graves of Missouri, Steve Chabot of Ohio, and twenty different Subcommittee Chairmen, (including then-Congressman Mick Mulvaney), she pursued an aggressive legislative agenda. During the 112th, 113th, and 114th Congresses, she drafted over 100 provisions on behalf of more than twenty six members of Congress that ultimately became law. Her contracting provisions reduced waste, fraud and abuse in government contracting. She also drafted a series of construction contracting reform provisions that streamlined design-build contracting. Emily led efforts fight the Obama Administration's use of executive orders to pursue unrelated social policies through contracting.

Most recently, Emily worked with the House Committee on Armed Services with the Acquisition Reform Initiative. In this role, she formulated provisions for the now-enacted FY 2017 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) and the forthcoming FY 2018 NDAA. These include reforms to commercial contracting, auditing, service contracting, acquisition workforce, and business processes of the Department of Defense. Prior to joining the Armed Services Committee, she collaborated with the Committee on the FY12-FY16 NDAA's and the 2013 report Challenges to Doing Business with the Department of Defense.

In addition to her federal service, Emily spent five years working for a technology startup company engaged in federal contracting, both as the General Counsel and the Vice President of Operations. She also practiced as a government contracts attorney with Wiley Rein and Fielding. She has the unique experience of having worked on government contracts from all sides.

A lifelong Republican who served as an officer in the College Republicans at Smith College and a member of the Federalist Society at the University of Virginia School of Law, Emily served on the transition team for President Trump, sourcing candidates for multiple federal agencies.
